This is a story of a child who is physically handicapped. Because of handicapping conditions, such a cerebral palsy, at least one out of ten school-aged children is in need of special help. This story encourages the growth and positive attitudes on the part of normal children toward those who are handicapped. It is about a boy whose emotions can be recognized by many children, no matter what their experience with handicaps has been.

A young boy playing with friends at the lake suddenly realize that he is different from them. In the water's reflection, Tony sees that he does not have sky-colored eyes and yellow hair like Scott, nor does he have brown skin and hair dark as night as Will. The other boys notice too. Will is Indian.
